Australian South Sea Islanders (Port Jackson) ('ASSIPJ') have been a catalyst for the revival of the 1992 Human Rights and Equal Opportunities Commission's Report (HREOCR) – the 'Call for Recognition', for descendants of Australia's Blackbirding trade known as the 'Indentured Labour' scheme. Emelda's expertise span some 30 years having worked extensively in media, grass roots community development and Indigenous/ASSI communities as well as on federal and state government initiatives. Emelda as chairwomen has also played a key role as contact by the national and global media industry for comment in relation to all ASSI current affairs, news and documentary interviews.

Extract of our community engagement on Vanuatu/Pacific/ASSI:

Over the past decade, the success of our Advocacy and Pastoral Care services in providing the necessary culturally specific support and local community management framework is evident in the strength of our grassroots ASSI network organisations and the number of instances where we have furthered the employment opportunities of our peoples through the operation of our compassionate care networks.

ASSIPIJ have worked effectively and collaboratively where we assisted our female and male workers in coping with mental wellness and health issues, soft skills education, 24-hour outreach through local leaders and grassroots associations, national disaster resources, covid response distribution and receiving country culturally specific networks, translation services, emergency housing, sustenance and troubleshooting broader communication with authorities.

We have been recognised for this work and awarded by federal, state, local and grassroots community organisations and testimonials.
